Robert Montgomery

as we see it

The latest videochondriac in our collection (some people collect coins or stamps; we collect doctors who blame television for practically anything) is a Texan. He's Dr. Salmon R. Halpern of Dallas, who told the Southern Medical Association that television may be the cause of at least one form of the common cold.

Dr. Halpern is a rare collector's item, and will be valued as highly as other rare specimens, such as the dentist who said childrens' teeth get out of whack because they lean on their chins while watching TV, the chiropractor who insists TV causes back trouble because people slump in their chairs before TV screens and the doctor who blames TV for obesity because viewers keep nibbling at snacks.

Our Dr. Halpern points out that children who watch television while lying on a rug may contract an "allergic" type of cold. He does not recommend specific treatment for such colds; or preventive medicine, such as telling the kids to get up off the floor. His solution is to spray the rugs with a special chemical.

Any day now we expect a doctor to blame television for another type of cold—the kind you get while watching TV from a chair in front of an open window when the temperature is two below zero. And how come no doctor has yet blamed television for scurvy; that is, scurvy in children who refuse to touch food except the cereal advertised on television?

Perhaps videochondriac will not suit lexicographers as the proper word to describe doctors who attribute ailments to television. It will have to do, however, until someone thinks of a better one. Meanwhile, we are tending our collection carefully, ever on the alert for more examples of ancient ailments which are suddenly blamed on a brand new medium.

Hollywood Stubs Its Toe

Major Film Studios Try TV—And Find It Rough

Three of Hollywood's major studios eyed the overwhelming success scored last season by ABC's Disneyland and decided the time was ripe to try TV. Several months of tackling the new medium, however, have left them sadder and wiser.

First into the fray was Warner Brothers, with a slicked-up three-parter for ABC called Warner Brothers Presents, consisting of three separate 45-minute series—"Kings Row," "Casablanca" and "Cheyenne"—each carrying a nine-minute behind-the-scenes caboose designed to sell Warner Brothers pictures.

The initial reviews, particularly those in trade papers, were not happy ones. Warners moved fast and fired the program's executive producer, replacing him with a man of considerably more experience. There have been shake-ups since on both the "Kings Row" and "Casablanca" series, with the former reported earmarked for replacement next season.

With the season now one-third over, Warners' ratings have begun to climb, its top show proving to be "Cheyenne," a Western of the old school. But the show's latest overall rating average of 25.1 is still a far far cry from Milton Berle's competing 40.5. Warners, like 20th Century-Fox, is learning it takes more than a $100,000 budget and a studio name to score on TV.

Fox, too, is presenting an hour-long show, alternating every other week with the U.S. Steel Hour on CBS. Like the Warners show, The 20th Century-Fox Hour is divided into 45 minutes of dramatic fare and nine minutes of behind-the-scenes movie activity. Its rating also has hovered around the 25 mark, as against an average of 33 for This Is Your Life and 29 for the Wednesday night fights. It, too, has shuffled its executive staff, not once but several times. And, particularly with its remakes of "The Ox Bow Incident" and "The Late George Apley," the program has begun to show marked improvement. Its sponsor is still concerned, however, by the fact that U.S. Steel Hour, budgeted at $50,000 as against the Fox show's $100,000, is running ahead of the Fox entry.

Fox also is learning about half-hour TV shows the hard way. Its first such attempt, My Friend Flicka, was a long time being sold by CBS. But it has finally landed a sponsor, and Fox is planning to start work on three new series next month.

Director and technicians watch as Raymond Massey and Joanne Woodward enact a scene for 20th Century-Fox Hour's 'The Late George Apley.'

M-G-M soon ran into trouble when viewers complained the studio seemed to expend more effort in plugging its movies than in providing entertainment on its M-G-M Parade, budgeted at $40,000 a week. Changes were not slow coming. ABC reported the studio soon decided to reduce the number of references to M-G-M on the show and to eliminate some of the superlatives describing forthcoming films.

Still later, with M-G-M Parade averaging a 15 in the Nielsen competition on ABC, against 26 for Arthur Godfrey and His Friends and 23 for Father Knows Best, the agency fired another salvo. "We have taken a dim view of the show so far," a top agency executive stated, "and have had talks with M-G-M on improving the quality. We'd like to pitch in with our own people who know television."

Even the most enthusiastic movie man admits that neither the three new major studio shows nor two other new movie-influenced entries, Screen Directors Playhouse and Alfred Hitchcock Presents, have come anywhere near setting the TV audience on its ear.

"The plain fact of the matter," a Vine St. regular remarked recently, "is that, for all the money and prestige the movie people brought to TV, they are still continued turning out just good, average shows. They have contributed little creative imagination."

The majors, however, are taking criticism of their TV product in stride.

"Our main problem," says Otto Lang, executive producer of The 20th Century-Fox Hour, "is the shortage of story material and the pressure of the time element to meet air dates. We never approached TV with the idea that it would be easy. We have approached it with the greatest concern. It is very difficult to merge expediency and economy with artistic integrity, or whatever you wish to call it."

Lang points out that a movie producer can take six months to develop a script from a story, whereas the TV producer has minutes. "But I hope," he adds, "I will never come to the point of accepting the script just for the sake of having one." He adds further, a trifle sadly, "We have a lot to learn, I guess."

Over at M-G-M, executive producer Les Petersen makes the same admission. "We're constantly experimenting to see what can be done to help," he says cheerfully. "Why, we've learned that a hilarious scene from a movie is suddenly not very funny when seen by just two or three people in a living room. So we've been experimenting with laugh tracks. And it hasn't been easy to learn how to lead into and out of the commercials, either. We're changing all the time. Every department in this whole studio is knocking itself out to help. They all seem to have the TV bug."

Petersen is quick, too, to say he never felt TV would be easy. "I respect anyone," he says flatly, "who can get so much as the title and the credits on the air in time."

George Murphy and 'Little Leo' boost M-G-M feature films on M-G-M Parade.

While Warners is answering all queries with "No comment," the evidence seems to indicate that the major studios, while not having bitten off more than they can chew, have at least found the chewing much more complicated than they had envisioned. Artistic teeth accustomed to a leisurely diet of creamed chicken, as it were, have to adjust to the demands of a fast-broiled steak.—Dan Jenkins

Cosmopolitan Is The Word For Actresses In 'The Vise'

ABC's The Vise stresses suspense. However, there's one angle—or perhaps, curve—of each program that viewers can predict: a beauty is bound to pop up. Only question: from where? The show is filmed in Britain but the girls are imported from almost every English-speaking country in the world in one of TV's most ambitious bits of global glamor casting.

◀From Ireland comes Eunice Gayson, who made TV debut previously when wed on Bride and Groom.

From Malaya: Carol Day, whose parents operated a rubber plantation, is from Kuala Lumpur in the Malay States.

England is the home of Petula Clark, a former child star of the British stage and movies, now frequently on TV.

Tonypandy, Wales, is where Marian Collins, singer as well as actress, was born. She also is on the London stage.

◀From Canada to Hollywood to England is the route taken by Kay Callard, who appears on TV and British stage.

A Request From Miss Lee

The woman with the ungainly bundle approached the reception desk at Ch. 2 and asked for Miss Lee Phillip. Told the star of Shopping with Miss Lee was out, the woman hesitated, then placed the bundle on the receptionist's desk and explained her mission.

Last Christmas, she said, Miss Phillip had asked her women viewers to make toys so that she could distribute them to children in hospitals and orphanages.

Ever since the last Christmas season, the woman continued, she had been busily making toy dogs and waiting for Miss Phillip to make a similar request for this Yuletide season.

The announcement had been repeated and now the woman was bringing in the 22 stuffed dogs she had made—long-bodied toys in checked, striped, solid and two-tone patterns.

The 22 toys are only an indication of the response to a request from Miss Lee. Other women, too, had been awaiting the announcement, for within five days after Lee asked for volunteers, Ch. 2 had run out of patterns.

This year her seamstresses are making "Toto," a merry clown. Last year they made Humpty Dumpty with such a big, fat stomach the children could use it for a pillow.

Miss Lee is virtually buried under Humpty Dumpties made by her obedient viewers.

This year Lee's toys are going to the Cook County Hospital, St. Vincent's Orphanage, La Rabida and Children's Memorial. Some of them will be sent to an almost-destitute orphanage that Lee and husband, Bill Bell, discovered while visiting Haiti last summer.

Lee, a former Sunday School superintendent at Riverside Presbyterian Church, is known by her viewers and fellow-workers as an almost tireless worker for humanity. Her week-ends she spends in making appearances for charity, her Sundays in teaching Sunday School and part of her program time in finding homes for lost pets.

This last is the result of last summer's run-in with an aromatic skunk. Her efforts to find the unwelcome animal a home convinced the Animal Welfare League that she was a friend of the four-footed. Would she use some of her television time to help place homeless animals, the league asked.

Yes, said Lee. Now, several times a week, Lee shows her audience a number of orphaned animals in hopes that some owner will recognize his pet or that some viewer will take a stray.

Lee and Bill do so much running about on their charitable misions that they content themselves with a midget-sized apartment on the Near North for their home life. The kitchen fits one person as snugly as a kayak fits an Eskimo and, as for the living room, once Lee pulls down the bed, there's no room left.

Harassed by trying to be in so many spots at the same time, the Bells are working on what they think will be a perfect solution. They have bought an old airplane, which Lee says has so many holes in the bottom she can see straight through to the ground, and are working towards their pilot's licenses. When those are earned, the couple figure they'll save lots of time.

A supposedly "de-skunked" skunk started Lee on a project finding homes for pets.

Lee and her viewers help bring Christmas to children's hospitals and orphanages.

Eartha Kitt in "SALOME" by Oscar Wilde

co-starring Leo Genn and Patricia Neal

Oscar Wilde's drama of ambition, religious zeal, distorted love and violence is based on a New Testament episode, but adapted to the literary attitudes of the 1890's when it first appeared. The prophet Jokanaan (John the Baptist) denounces Herod, Tetrarch of Judaea, for marrying Herodias, his brother's divorced wife. For this, Herodias succeeds in persuading Herod to throw Jokanaan into prison.

There by chance he is visited by Salome. Salome is Herodias' daughter by the earlier marriage, and is noted for her beauty and her skill at dancing. She is powerfully attracted to the austere man of God, but he repulses her. When Herod promises to fulfill any wish Salome might express if she will dance for him, Salome performs the famous Dance of the Seven Veils, then demands as her reward Jokanaan's head.

The opera by Richard Strauss, based on the play, has already been seen on television. Though today's presentation is the original drama, there will be incidental music especially composed for it.

TV GUIDE RATINGS

	Rating	Bouts	W	L	D	KO's
Boyd		9	43	6	2	20
Socrtichini	Unrated	51	28	17	6	11

Boyd, a tall hitter with a very long reach, is one of the fast-rising fighters in his division. His bouts against Gene Fullmer and Georgie Johnson were thrillers. Scortichini has a reputation for being a "spoiler." He held Welterweight Champion Carmen Basilio to a draw.

Robert Montgomery ponders problem with author, director, designer of TV drama.

'TV's Not What It Used To Be'

Robert Montgomery Reminisces About Six Years On The Air

Robert Montgomery, nearing the end of his sixth year as producer, host and sometime star of one of television's most popular dramatic hours, shudders when he thinks of what were, allegedly, TV's "good old days."

But despite the toil and trouble which accompanied that pioneer era, Montgomery, the first top name movie personality to enter TV full-scale, has few visible scars to show for his years of service.

Today, at 51, he remains a kingly figure: tall, still handsome, just a little paunchy. From his NBC office, high in a steel and concrete tower, he often looks down on mid-Manhattan and back across the years to the fall of 1949 when Robert Montgomery Presents was conceived.

"I was in England then," he recalls, "and the idea of doing a television show was a little remote. Nobody talked about TV in 1949 except the National Broadcasting Co. They talked to me, and I listened. continued

Although Montgomery's acting skill in TV dramas like 'The Lost Weekend' wins praise,

"The whole idea was stimulating. Here was an opportunity to present the best in plays, novels and short stories in an entirely new medium. It was an interesting challenge to a producer, director or actor."

Montgomery had accepted challenge before. In 1924, he quit the apathetic life of an unpublished playwright for a small part in a Broadway play. Four years later, he left the stage for Hollywood, where he performed a succession of romantic roles with airy nonchalance (one critic described him as playing his parts "without touching the handlebars."). In 1937, he established himself as a serious actor in "Night Must Fall"; in 1945, as a director of talent with "They Were Expendable."

"I came back to New York and met with the network people. We established a format, the one we have kept to this day, and we went right to work on the scripts."

Montgomery's first show, aired in January, 1950, was "The Letter," starring Madeleine Carroll.

The first few years were full of pitfalls. "TV's not what it used to be," Montgomery says wryly. In one show, an actor muffed his lines and the other members of the cast were forced to ad-lib for 10 minutes before he recovered. In another, a stagehand inadvertently left a ladder in full view of the camera, and there it remained, while the actors dodged under it, throughout the entire act. In a third, an absent-minded Montgomery, interviewing Teresa Wright, repeatedly called her "Martha."

"We had production problems that would kill a man today," he says. "We produced our show at 67th St. and Central Park West; our music came from Rockefeller Center, half a mile away; the commercials came in from Columbus Circle. We figured we were lucky if we got them all on the air the same night."

In the early days the cameras on Robert Montgomery Presents were forever conking out, the stagehands falling on their faces, the lights blinking with eerie inconsistency, some of the actors behaving like jittery magpies. Yet the show has missed only one performance—that, because of a studio strike.

With all their troubles, the early Montgomery shows helped establish he usually appears only as host.

TV as an entertainment giant. Like Studio One and Kraft TV Theater, they brought dramatic originality into the living room.

Today, as slick and smooth as the wax made by one of its sponsors, Robert Montgomery Presents tries to live up to its early aesthetic promise, with varying success. It has been consistently popular with viewers and sponsors, however, while more pretentious drama programs have fallen by the wayside. This, Montgomery feels, is because "We keep our standards high, we respond to our audiences and we try to keep a step ahead of their tastes. We aim for one thing: that intangible called 'quality.'

"TV acting is the toughest acting there is. It combines the problems of all the other forms: the sense of immediacy of the theater, the letter-perfect accuracy of the films, the ice-clear speech of radio. There is no room for temperament on TV."

Montgomery does less acting for two reasons. "One, I wear two hats. [He is an NBC executive, as well as president of Neptune Productions, producers of Robert Montgomery Presents.] Two, I feel I'm limited now as to the type of part I can play."

As an actor, Montgomery was known for his willingness to try unusual parts; as a director, for giving his actors freedom of action. As a television producer, Montgomery would like to be associated with a determination to avoid the hackneyed. Among his favorite TV productions were "David Copperfield," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "The Lost Weekend" and "Victoria Regina"; future ones, he thinks, will surpass these.

Coming up are a drama based on the death of Albert Einstein, Archibald MacLeish's "Fall of the City," a story of a heart attack with the camera itself as the protagonist and an unusual play about Abraham Lincoln.

He has little patience with those who complain about "too much misery" in TV dramas. ("Let's let the audiences —and not just the critics—decide what's good and what's bad on TV.") And he doesn't think there's anything wrong with the medium that a few good scripts wouldn't cure. ("TV is a pair of hungry jaws that you have to keep feeding with scripts.")

Montgomery feels he has been singularly fortunate in the actors he has employed on Robert Montgomery Presents. John Newland, his leading man for years, is now one of his leading directors. Gone are such familiar faces as Vaughn Taylor and Margaret Hayes, but they would be with him yet, he feels, were they not "the happy victims of success." Both have been called to Hollywood.

Only one actor, says Montgomery, has walked out on his show—a film star who blithely took off for Hollywood the day rehearsals began.

"That's what they call 'temperament,' I guess," says Montgomery, with a sigh, "and that's what, thank goodness, we don't have any more of on TV!"—Frank De Blois

Africa-

At $15 A Foot

TV's Jungle Backgrounds Often Come From A Can

Africa in the raw: a leopard snarls from a tree,

Africa is bringing $2.50 to $15 a foot these days—at least, on film.

In the past couple of years, the price has nearly doubled for its lions (couchant or rampant), native villages (inland or river) and wild herds (grazing or stampeding). For most of TV's "Africa" comes out of cans, and stock film shots of the Dark Continent are now enlivening some 100 network or local shows.

Of the 30,000,000 feet of film currently on hand at a single Hollywood stock film library, Independent Producers Film Exchange, about 7,000,000 are of African backgrounds.

In fact, says Independent's head, Jack Eisenbach, some TV programs consist of 100 percent stock footage, which leaps through the cameras at the rate of 90 feet (or $225 to $1350) per minute. Some of its animal stars date back to Frank Buck; some are right off the boat, shot in Tanganyika by big-game hunters to defray the costs of safaris.

Canned or otherwise, however, Africa is largely a state of mind. Casts and crews of such TV thrillers as Sheena, Queen of the Jungle and Jungle Jim have a name for it: the Straw Hut Circuit. And it may be anywhere —just outside Nairobi or just inside Burbank, Cal.

Sheena derives its African backgrounds from three sources: location trips to Cuernavaca, Mexico, studio sets in California's Culver City, and scene actually made in the wilds.

Sheena: nearest she gets to Africa is Hollywood.

footage shot by a professional cameraman on order in Africa itself.

The Sheena cameraman is Miki Carter, whose footage also is scheduled for a TV Tarzan series planned by Sol Lesser. Among backgrounds and atmosphere shots to be woven into the story (starring Gordon Scott) are the 40 yawning miles of Africa's Ngorongoro Crater and its Masai warriors, filmed for a "Tarzan" feature picture.

Jungle Jim gets its Africa partly from feature pictures filmed there by the producing firm's parent company, Columbia Pictures; partly from a 40-acre lake created on Columbia Ranch in Burbank for the TV series, and partly from TV's largest permanent set. A compound surrounded by African jungle, this set covers two large sound stages of 5000 square feet, connected by a cyclorama or artificial sky 16 feet high and 375 feet long.

Animals, of course, remain the big reason for the use of stock film. Eisenbach's most popular single item is a one-minute sequence of a panther stalking a man from a tree limb, then pouncing on him and throwing him to the ground. Shot in Hollywood four years ago on order, it's been used, Eisenbach estimates, on 15 TV shows.

"But nobody ever recognizes the panther," he says. "That's because sometimes he jumps from the left side, sometimes from the right. Turn the film over—you have a new animal."

The Honeymooners

Kramden & Co.: Jackie Gleason, Audrey Meadows, Art Carney, Joyce Randolph.

Jackie Gleason's decision to cut his hour-long CBS show of last season down to half an hour, retaining—on film—only the segment about bus-driver Ralph Kramden, his wife and neighbors, doesn't seem to have affected The Honeymooners in the slightest. It is still a rollicking, slapsticky, fast-paced situation comedy, played for the big reaction.

Gleason himself, who has developed into one of the most versatile talents in the business today, plays his role to the hilt. As Kramden, whose big ideas are matched only by his big mouth, he ranges nimbly from self-pitying pathos to bullying braggadocio—magnificently phony and generally entertaining.

Gleason is a master of comedy timing and delivery. He also is a master of wise casting, having bulwarked himself with such shining examples of the skilful "second banana" as Art Carney and Audrey Meadows.

The Gleason scripts are not all gems and many of them exude an air of old familiarity—the mistaken identity bit, the misunderstanding, the big lie. The Gleason-Carney-Meadows triumvirate, however, gives the old cliches a new freshness. Even Gleason's own cliches—"Some day, Alice, you're gonna get yours"—seem to stand up remarkably well under hard usage. Gleason's entire operation, in fact, is perhaps best explained by still another cliche: "It's not what you do, it's the way that you do it." He does it extremely well.—D.J.

Ann Harding and Hugh Beaumont.

Crossroads

Crossroads, based on actual adventures of American clergymen, interestingly portrays their work and their accomplishments. Although its writers sometimes lean toward melodrama, the show is honest, effective and well worth viewing.

The ABC film series was conceived by a New York rabbi, who serves on its editorial board with a Catholic priest and a Protestant minister. The stories, involving clergymen of all faiths, are set in locales ranging from the Philippines during the Japanese occupation to the death house of a penitentiary. They fulfill their purpose: to salute the courage and understanding of our clergy.

The series is extremely well-produced, acted and directed, and uses top Hollywood and TV actors. Vincent Price scored as a courageous smalltown minister crusading against gambling and vice; Luther Adler was fine as a rabbi who saved an innocent youth from execution for murder, and Don Taylor was entirely credible as a priest held by crazed gunmen as a penitentiary hostage.—R.S.

FINE TUNING

By Ollie Crawford

Network plans Do You Trust Your Wife? show. It's sort of a sequel to Bride and Groom.

It's a quiz program, but unfortunately they ask more questions than that.

The husband has to decide whether he will trust his wife to answer, or answer himself. If he guesses right, he can win up to $100,000; and if he guesses wrong, all he can lose is his wife. The couple can win up to $100,000, and many a trusting husband wouldn't trust his wife with all that loot.

If they win, they can open the Husband & Wife Trust Company.

The new CBS show will star Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy, so at least one guy is teamed up with a dummy. The show may end up with all the Jills trying for jackpots. The husband who tries and misses can spend the rest of his life holding hands, in self defense.

It might be better to be henpecked, and end up with chickenfeed.

The guy who doesn't trust his wife shouldn't be sitting around watching television.

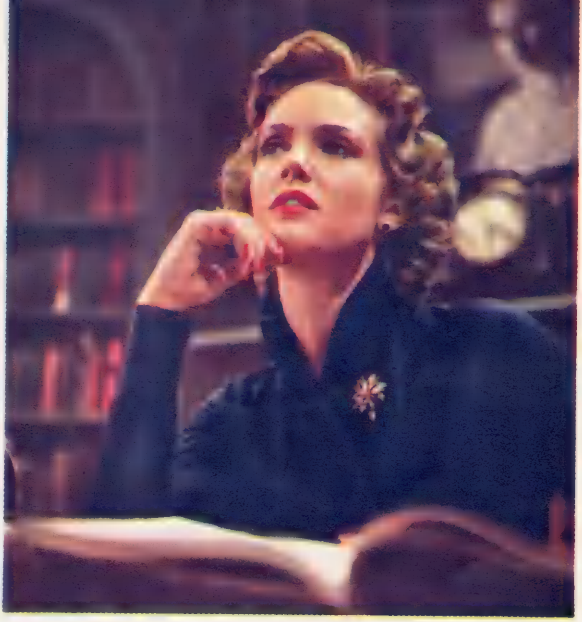
Barbara Britton Sells... She rehearses commercial with Hal March.

She Leads Three Lives

During recent weeks, Barbara Britton starred in Date with Life—"a prestige soap opera," she says. As the super-sleuth of the Mr. and Mrs. North series, she's seen on film around the country. And Tuesday nights she pitches the commercials for The $64,000 Question.

In addition to her three TV lives, she lived a fourth—a movie life—while filming "The Spoilers" in Hollywood.

She's also the wife of Eugene Czukor, a naturopath, and mother of Teddy, 8½, and Chris, 4. Because of Question, they may all move East permanently. "I like the show," says Barbara, with unequalled candor, "because on it, I get to look so pretty."



Suffers... She gets into mood for soap opera.

And Sleuths... 'Pam North' teams with Richard Denning.
